

What is a brand?

■ A brand is more than a product

- A brand is a set of associations built over time, that are attributable to a product, service or company
 - A brand is a promise of an experience; a relationship with your customer

- Functional benefits
- Made in a factory
- Can be objectively measured and evaluated

- Functional and emotional benefits
- Exists in the minds and hearts of customers
- Difficult to objectively evaluate

Brands add value to the core offering

- If people can't see a clear reason to buy one product over another – if they think all deliver the same value and quality – they buy whatever's available at the lowest price

Commodity —————> Brand

Soft drinks

Sneakers

Computers

Automobiles

Commodity —————> Brand

Search
Engines

Hotel

Water

Your
Category?

Anything can be branded

- Strong brands exist in both products and services, for both consumer and business markets

The strongest brands are able to distill their brand into a core essence

- Brands are often a source of something much larger than their core category offering

Not theme parks . . .

The source of magical entertainment experiences

Not software

The source of easy access to new possibilities

Not systems

The source of information-based solutions

Not coffee

The source of rewarding everyday moments

Not your category. . .

The source of . . .

Brands are multi-dimensional

- The strongest brands have a rich set of associations built over time

The benefits of brand development are both internal and external

